

COLUMBIA'S BIGGEST DAY

NARY 1,500 DEGREES IN COLLEGE HONORARY ONES.

Prof. Chandler Gets the Biggest Commencement of the Day When He is Made an L. L. D. Highest Graduate of Barnard, Dr. Butler Talks of Limiting Colleges.

Columbia had its greatest commencement yesterday. It was the 157th commencement of the university on Morningside Heights and exactly 1,471 students received degrees or diplomas in addition to thirteen honorary degrees. Charles Frederick Chandler, who has been a professor at Columbia since 1864 and has retired from the service of the university at the age of 76, had the place of honor in the program and received the degree of doctor of laws and an engrossed copy of a set of resolutions passed by the university trustees.

Thrilling scenes had no effect on the timing of parents, friends and relatives which began to pour on to the Columbia campus as early as 8 o'clock, two hours before the exercises were to begin. At 10 o'clock the doors of the gymnasium were opened nearly 1,000 persons had gathered on the green at the entrance to the auditorium. Shortly before 10 o'clock the seniors in Columbia College emerged from the main doors of the Low library and proceeded slowly down the steps and to the rear across the campus. This was the beginning of the academic procession and in turn came the graduates in Barnard and Teachers colleges, their white gowns covered by the black of their academic costumes. When the candidates had all taken their departure from the library the members of the faculty marched out, followed by the university trustees and those who were to receive honorary degrees.

Despite the grayness of the day there was here and there a dash of color as the holders of higher degrees filed past with their hoods showing the pale blue and white of Columbia, in striking contrast to the deep crimson of the Harvard degree, the purple of Williams and the shining orange and black of Princeton. Edward Robinson, director of the Metropolitan Museum, who was to receive a degree, wore the brilliant scarlet and the gown of his Cambridge degree. President Butler brought up the rear of the procession adorned in a pink and white gown of St. Andrews.

When the procession had at last distributed itself among the 2,000 odd seats in the gymnasium, the Rev. Raymond Collier Knox, chaplain of the university, read the prayer of the day, and President Butler stepped down to the reading desk and delivered his address of farewell to the graduates.

There were rousing cheers when Dean Keppel of Columbia College presented the college graduates to President Butler for their degrees. There were 141 candidates from the college, the largest number that has ever been graduated. William Cullen Bryant Kemp, Columbia's perpetual student, was on the program for the degree of B. S., making the fifth academic degree that Kemp has acquired in his sojourn of twenty-five years as a student at Columbia. Angelo Lipari was announced as being the first student at the college to have taken advantage of the system of honor courses and to get his degree with high honors in the Romance languages and Latin.

Dean Virginia Crocherson Childers recommended for degrees 105 Barnard college girls, among them Margaret Rosaline Hogan, who has been totally blind since infancy, and Alice Margaret Gorman, the daughter of Senator Gorman. Senator Gorman was unable to attend the ceremonies. Lucius Rignow, Yale's football captain in 1907, received the degree of bachelor of arts with ninety-two of his classmates. One of the most prominent features of the ceremony of conferring the degrees in Columbia was the administration of the Hippocratic oath to the newly graduated medical doctors by Prof. John C. Curtis, now retired, who for many years was dean of the College of Physicians and Surgeons. One of those who received the degree of M. A. in English was Virginia Flanagan, daughter of the coroner's physician.

William Peterfield Trent, the university major, presented the candidates for the honorary degrees, who were, in addition to Prof. Chandler, Gov. Baldwin of Connecticut, Surgeon-General Stokes, U. S. N. Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, Samuel Bishop Burch of New York, John E. Moran of the class of '94 Mines, and John Fairchild, formerly president of New York College of Pharmacy. Edward Robinson, director of the Metropolitan Museum, and Alonzo Barton Hepburn, president of the Chamber of Commerce.

In giving to Dr. Stokes the degree of doctor of science, President Butler said: "Charles Francis Stokes, a graduate in medicine of this university, distinguished by his professional knowledge and his high personal qualities to the distinguished and responsible post of Surgeon-General of the United States Navy. I gladly admit you to the degree of doctor of medicine in this university."

Bishop Lawrence, who was coming from Boston to attend the commencement, was delayed by a train wreck at Hartford and did not arrive at the university until the formal exercises. President Butler, however, presented his degree in absentia. In conferring the degree on the recipients he said:

"Charles Sumner Burch, Bishop Suffragan of New York, called by reason of special talents to high and important service in the church and entering upon that service with the degree of doctor of sacred theology in this university."

William Lawrence, Bishop of Massachusetts, a tried and trusted counsellor and leader in religious and ecclesiastical, bearing a great responsibility and a noble addition with worthy distinction, I gladly admit you to the degree of doctor of sacred theology in this university."

Alonzo Barton Hepburn, combining in himself the qualities of a scholar and a practical man, a man of high character and high ability, I gladly admit you to the degree of doctor of laws in this university."

John E. Moran, a man of high character and high ability, I gladly admit you to the degree of doctor of laws in this university."

John Fairchild, a man of high character and high ability, I gladly admit you to the degree of doctor of laws in this university."

TWO OF THREE GIVEN SUMMA CUM LAUDE GO TO WOMEN.

Main Sports Parade of the Graduates, but There is No Letting of the Crowd - Chinaman Who Came to See Fellow Countryman Take Degree is Injured.

Several hundred persons waited in the rain outside of the New York University yesterday afternoon to see the seniors in cap and gown walk through the Hall of Fame. The seniors didn't walk, but the crowd saw a well-dressed young man start down a pathway toward the terrace where the names of the illustrious are inscribed on the wall.

The record of prize winners was the largest in the history of Columbia and was headed by George William Artway Scott, '11, and A. M. Grill, '11, who received the Goldwin Smith gold and silver medals respectively for excellence in public speaking. Miss Lowell Yates, '11, of Iliot, N. Y., won the English literary prize open to seniors who are candidates for admission to the General Theological Seminary, and the Charles H. Fox prize was awarded to Dixon Ryan Fox of Potsdam, N. Y.

In the College of Physicians and Surgeons the Cartwright prize, a prize of $600, awarded every year, was received by Martin H. Fischer, M. D., a graduate of the University of Cincinnati in the class of 1901. The illig medals in the department of medicine were awarded to a request from William C. Hill, '10, who was awarded to Carl Haner of New York. Percy R. Isman of New York and Philip Henry Wilson of Chicago, a graduate of Princeton in the class of '10, were awarded prizes in mechanical engineering was won by Frederick Thurlow Lacy of New York.

The Tappan prize in the school of political science was awarded to Louis Mayers of New York and Biri E. Schultz, De Pauw, '09, of Harrisville, Ind. John William Ingle, Jr., won the medal of the Society of Political Science for proficiency in advanced design, and the New Jersey alumni prizes were awarded to Frederick C. Nyland of Glen Ridge, N. J., and Oscar Byron of Jersey City. Clarence Augustus Manning of New York won the Earle prize in classics, with Edith Moore Valet receiving honorable mention.

In the College of the Kohn mathematical prize was awarded to Lottie June Grief, '11, of New York, and the Flanagan prize was won by Margaret Tower Hart, '11, of New York. The prize of the Society of the Humanities was awarded to St. Joseph, Mo., received the award of the Herman botanical prize. The Jenny A. Gerard medal, given by the Society of Colonial Dames in America in commemoration of the death of John Jay, was won by Louise de Forest Greenawald of Red Bank, N. J. Highest final general honors at Barnard were won by Harriet Florence Hale, Margaret Taylor, and Katherine Huntington Tiemann in the College of Pharmacy. The Breitenbach prize was awarded to Arthur Machol and the Kappa Psi prize to Marion W. Astoria. Walter Reganau won the faculty graduate prize.

At the conclusion of the formal exercises the academic procession marched to the new building for the Avery Architectural Library and Dean James Russell Wheeler of the faculty of fine arts laid the cornerstone of the structure. Henry F. Hornbostel, president of the Society of Columbia University Architects, made a address and Dr. Butler announced that the hitherto unknown donor of the building was Samuel P. Avery. A stone seat or pedestal situated on the east side of the Low library was dedicated to the university by the class of '06. John V. Bouvier making the presentation address. The class of '06 to the university was made the class of '06, which had fitted out a students' meeting room in Hamilton Hall in commemoration of the thirtieth anniversary of the graduation of the class. This room was formally turned over to the university by Howard Van Sinderen on behalf of his classmates.

The alumni dropped around in the rain for nearly an hour before the doors of the Memorial Hall were opened for the annual luncheon was held. Frederick René Coudert, '06, president, a position filled for a score of years by Dean Van Amringe. Gov. Baldwin made a short address and Senator d'Estournelles de Constant, who was his campaign for peace. Bishop Lawrence, whose train had arrived in time to permit him to attend the luncheon, made a address and announced that he was the start by telling them that one man sandwich had stood between him and salvation on the trip from Boston. He was offered nourishment, but he preferred to eat the provisions of the university of the future.

In making his annual address to the alumni President Butler made the theme of his talk the duty of the University of Columbia. He said, realizing now that the solution of that problem must be met, for instruction in too many fields of endeavor at one and the same time, and that the University must be complete decentralization. It would not be long, according to Columbia's president, before universities would have to be organized in a way that would be necessary, depth and soundness of learning and study.

One of the eagerly awaited features of his address was the announcement of the total gifts received during the year. Since July 1 last, said Dr. Butler, the Columbia treasury had received $2,135,000 in cash and has also obtained $429,000 in pledges. And, concluded Dr. Butler, "there are twenty-four days left in this month before the year ends."

When the luncheon broke up it had been planned to have an alumni costume parade on South Field just before the commencement day ball game with Lafayette. The rain, however, interfered, and for a time the alumni thought they weren't going to have the parade, but when President Butler announced that the parade was too late for the game, the parade was held on the quadrangle instead of on South Field, and the array of costumes was as varied as a dozen foreign flags at the foot of the building. One class, '08, led by Foster Ware, broke onto the campus as bandits. Two of them had real live horses on which they dashed about, and the others had carried off the available supply of hurdygurdies in Harlem and jangled out melodies by the roll.

The class of '07 won the prize put up by the class of '01 for the qualified costume parade. The '07 men were Chinese from the queues on the heads to the sabots on their feet. Each had a fan and a parasol, and Walter Kelley had a sedan chair which was toted around by a couple of classmates. There were hosts of summer boys, suffragettes, French students and pierrots.

Class dinners and reunion banquets were followed in the evening by a general reunion of the alumni on the library steps, where they entertained all of Morningside Heights for a couple of hours with their songs.

President Butler meanwhile had a dinner at the Metropolitan Club in honor of the recipients of degrees.

BARNARD ALUMNAE IN COSTUME.

Prize Goes to the Class of 1902 Dressed as Barnard Bears.

The alumnae of Barnard College of all ages and descriptions emulated their college campus. All the classes sent delegations. The class of 1904 had a band with which they supplied musical stimulation to the marchers; 1902, clad as Barnard Bears, won first place. There were also some small Barnard Bears who marched at the head of the line and incidentally won a prize for themselves. The prize was a banner donated by the Alumnae Association. The judges were Miss Annie Nathan Meyer, Miss Weeks, Mrs. Liggett and Dean Childers.

The most interesting part of the afternoon was the invasion of Barnard by the Columbia parade consisting of some blue and white cloths, a band, some Japanese soldiers and a band. The Columbia marched into the quadrangle, cleared Barnard, sang to Barnard, and then insisted on marching through Barnard's arms, metaphorically only. They marched under a line of Barnard staff held in the air.

Tennessee Offers Young Taft Chance to Be a Lawyer.
NASHVILLE, Tenn., June 7.—The Nashville Industrial Bureau to-day telegraphed to Robert Alphonso Taft, son of the President, to come to Nashville, take the State examination and establish himself here for practice.

Young Taft was denied examination in Ohio because he had not registered when he began to study law and must wait two years before taking the State examination there.

Student, Crazed by Work, Stabs Professor.
SHARON, Pa., June 7.—Luther D. Miller, a senior at Thiel College and the son of a prominent minister of Greensburg, to-day stepped up to Prof. Warren J. Ellis as if to hand him a paper and stabbed him in the back of the neck with a razor. Following the attack the young man ran to a hotel, where he was caught by the police. It is believed that close attention to his books caused mental aberration. Prof. Ellis will probably recover.
